CELEBRATING 30 YEARS OF FAIRYTALE, MYTH AND EPIC

Monday 16th April 8pm Red Bead Woman, by Martin Shaw.

Mythologist Martin Shaw sits at the very edge of the fire. Here a woman arises from a mare's tale plant with red beads falling from her mouth as she speaks, and a king's son tied to the top of the tallest pine tree, is slowly becoming a crow.

Down below the forest path splits into two. One path is that of the sable. The other path is that of the bear. One is good. One is very bad. Which one will you choose?

Enter a night of epic transformations.

'An outrageous piece of magic' David Abram

Monday 28th May. 8pm Tales of the Rabbit God, by Clare Muireann Murphy.

Down an oft-forgotten side-street, in the districts of desire, is a shrine to the Chinese Rabbit God, Hu Tianbao. Here love and gender are not tightly bound by rule, law or social expectation. Clare Murphy stumbles into the Rabbit God's court, looking way beyond 'boy meets girl', she unearths a veritable sweet shop selling every possible flavour of attraction and the myriad nature of sexual identity.

'For those thirsty for a different type of show this is a must see' Everything Theatre

Monday 18th June 8pm Crow. Blood. Snow., by Sally Pomme Clayton.

Crow was there at the beginning...

Crow warns of dangers, makes you fall in love, flies over the battlefield, brings the dead back to life, keeps the memories, counts time, waits for doom, is the echo of the land itself.

Sally Pomme Clayton weaves forgotten folklore and fragments of myth from Ireland to Italy, Scandinavia to Siberia – conjuring dark and dangerous, Crow.

'She delights in subverting her audience expectations'
